“ The enriching four years I spent at IC profoundly shaped my academic and professional journey. Exploring diverse subjects in communications and cultural studies, from structural functionalism to postmodernism, alongside the impact of AI and MR on society, enriched my understanding. The rigorous curriculum and nurturing environment at IC laid a strong foundation, enabling me to pursue a master’s at the esteemed London School of Economics (LSE). Equipped with invaluable skills, I excelled in internships at the UN in NYC and secured a role as Associate Inter-Agency Coordination Officer at UNHCR, becoming one of the youngest P2 staff. Grateful to IC for empowering me to drive positive global change. ”

The School of International Communications is affiliated to the Department of Culture, Media and Visual Studies at the Nottingham UK campus.

Understanding how to communicate, learn, express yourself and do business on global digital media platforms with people from all over the world and in many different languages is at the core of our teaching programmes.

Our BA (Hons) in International Communications is a provincial level accredited degree which includes a dedicated programme of study for English, a European or East Asian language. Its sister programme, BA (Hons) in International Communications with Chinese, has proved successful in attracting high quality international students to our school. Both programmes provide students with an opportunity to exchange to another Nottingham University campus or an external international university in their third year of study.

We offer two MA programmes—Digital Screen Production and International Communications Studies—and two PhD programmes in Culture Studies and Creative Practice.

Our alumni have continued their education in some of the world's leading universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, as well as working for companies like Google, TikTok, Huawei, and Alibaba.

We hope you too can join us on some of the most successful English language degree programmes in the humanities in mainland China.

BA International Communications Studies 国际传播学 文学学士

This programme aims to provide you with a critical understanding of the diverse ways in which communications take place in an increasingly interdependent world. You will be introduced to a range of cultural, economic, linguistic, political, psychological and social factors influencing the production and reception of contemporary communications. You will study subjects that will be of value in a career in the media or the cultural and creative industries.

You will explore contemporary international communications from a range of differing theoretical and methodological perspectives including both empirical and semiotic approaches to reading. Languages are an important part of the degree programme: a choice of a European language (French, German or Spanish), an Asian language (Japanese, Korean or Chinese), or English for Critical Communication and Critical Analysis from beginners' level will form a core element from years two to four.

Year 1 (Foundation Year)

The first year comprises a special programme of English for Academic Purposes designed by staff from the highly experienced Centre of English Language Learning (CELE) at the University of Nottingham. This is carefully integrated with introductory communications modules covering media, texts and culture, preparing students fully for years 2-4 of the degree.

Year 2 (Qualifying Year)

In this first year of specialist study there are core modules covering fundamental aspects of communications, culture and society, including media and society, communication and technology, and communication and culture. These extensive twenty-credit modules are structured around a student-centred approach to learning with extensive reading set alongside practical exercises intended to familiarise students with contemporary communications theory and practice. A compulsory Research Design module will also introduce you to the principles and methods of research in the field. You will also begin your language studies which are designed to foster the multi-lingual critical communication skills needed to be successful in the international arena today.

Year 3 (Part I)

During this year, you will build on the skills and knowledge you have acquired so far by applying them to a more in-depth study of issues relating to contemporary international communications in a variety of core and optional modules. Compulsory modules on Emerging Media Technologies and Media Ethics will deepen your engagement with current developments and ethical questions in the field. You will also choose from a range of optional modules and continue your language studies at a second higher level.

Year 4 (Part II)

In this year you can choose from a number of optional modules that allow you to focus in greater depth on specific media forms and cultural practices. Besides taught modules the focus of your study in this final year is an individual dissertation project. This is on a topic of your own choice and consists of guided research spread over the whole academic year. You will also complete your language training with a third more advanced level.

Engaging study, incredible results

The School of International Communications offers thriving undergraduate and postgraduate programmes and a teaching and research culture of the highest quality.

On all programmes in the school, students will explore the history, theory and practice of film, television, games and other communications media, along with the political, social, economic and cultural contexts within which media production and consumption occur.

Your week

A typical week for our students will entail five or six seminars, perhaps a tutorial to plan essay work or discuss how you are doing on a particular programme, and around six lectures. The remainder of your working week will be taken up with preparation and essay writing.

How will I be assessed?

Assessment is based on a mixture of coursework and exams. As you progress from the first to the final year of study, you'll take on more research and project-based assignments. In your final year you will write an original research dissertation under staff supervision.
