Asian executive MBAs: recognized internationally as demand grows

For business from public to policy, top schools in Asia offer global education

Executive Education: MBA programs

In an ever-increasing number of business schools worldwide, the executive MBA is gaining importance. Among the reasons: increasing global competition, shorter faculty salaries, shorter duration, a traditional MBA, worldwide location choices and a modular format and alignment to collaborate between different business schools.

The University of Nottingham in Ningbo, China, is one of the leading universities to offer an executive MBA in Asia. A two-year course of study for a degree in China, and in some cases, the ability to take courses at the University of Nottingham in the UK. The program is designed for busy professionals who wish to gain a prestigious U.K. degree while maintaining their full-time careers.

The program offers a balance of classroom and practical experience through the use of case studies. It is the ideal program for those who wish to combine academic learning with practical experience and leadership skills.
